NEW MEDICINE THE GREATEST SUCCESS OF MORE COD LIVER OIL. SYRUP 10DIZED HORSE-RADISH of GRIMAULT und Co., Apothecaries and choinlists. 7. Hue de la Fouillade, Paris. According to the certificates of the physicians of the Paris Hospitals, detailed in the prospectus, and with the approbation of several Academics, this Syrup is employed with the greatest success in place of Cod-liver Oil, 2 which it is really superior. It cures diseases of the chest, scrofuls, lymphatio disorders, green sickness, unuscular atony, and closs of appetite, at regenerates the constitution by purifying the Ploud, and is, in a word the most powerful dapusative known. It nover fatigues the stumach and apwels like the iedide of potassium and the iedide of iron, mid is administered with the greatest officacy to young children subject to humours, or obstruction of the glands. Dr. CAZENAVE, of Saint Louis, hospital Paris, recommends it particularly in cutaneous diseases conjointly with the dills which bear his name.

It is not impossible, that had the change in Copenhager occured a little earlier, the proposal to refer the line of frontier to arbitration might have been agreed upon. But it is now, we suppose, too late to revive that project and it remains for the new Danish Premier to invent a method of settlement that will be at once accepted by the Danish people and the German Powers. The task is no easy one. With unabated sympathies for a gallant race committed to such an unequal struggle, we can only express a hope that the new Ministry will succeed in preserving all that brute force has left of the interests and national territory of Denmark, and give bor a free political existence independent of ancroaching Germany .- Globe.

Railways in China.

And why not? The Report before us, with its excellent illustrative map, clearly indicates that |- Either of these premises can be let; or one less then half the length of railway already in operation in India will suffice to connect Pekin with Canton, and both with Hankow and Shanghae-in fact, to bring the extreme points of the empire into close and direct communication. But the difficulties! Let us consider the obstacles before forming too hasty copelusions.

Uf the benefit to the country, to the Governmen. of Ching, to the foreign trade, to the world at large in its relation to one-third of the human race, no reasonable man will entertain a doubt. Of the advantage of railway communication in almost any part of the world, past experience has pronounced its incontrovertible verdict How much more must. these advantages be felt in a country with a swarming population, a gigantic internal trade, tardy Splendld Rooms. und imperfect as well as costly and insecure means of conveyance, and almost inexhaustible resources. undeveloped only for want of cheup and rapid transport I No one can for one moment doubt that t the introduction of railways into China would be the first and certain step towards its restoration to peace and prosperity. We prefer, in examining a great question of this kind, to consider the unfarournble side of the picture, in preference to dwelling upon the brighter features; and we do so, not in any spirit of a tagonism or with the desire to obstruct, but simply to analyse the opposing elements, and to attach to there only so much weight as they intrinsically deserve. The difficulties, then, to which we refer, and which we are disposed to believe may be overcome by the adoption of a prudenr course of proceeding, are the indisposition of the Chinese to sanction any Innovating measurestroduced by foreigners, the unsettled state of the country' and the great distances, involving, of necoasity a great outlay. To the first objection the Pen ort contains a very sufficient apply, the propasals to the Imperial Government being framed in a from to entirely obviate any apprehension on this groun ; and in stiting that the railway is less a new work then an improvement upon the existing thinese canal navigation, the case is clearly and correctly stated.
